November 9th—"The fact of the matter is, that if you want to save the United States, if you want to save our nation and for what it stands, you have to concentrate on the mission of Manhattan, the mission of Manhattan which is defined by Alexander Hamilton. It’s still there today."

With that opening charge to the November 7 weekly meeting of his Manhattan Project in New York City, American Statesman Lyndon LaRouche proceeded to lay out the battle plan to rescue the United States, and the planet, from the brink of disaster.

LaRouche stated: "The first thing we have to do, in order to do that, we have to throw Obama out of office. Because if Obama is not removed from office, Obama will take the world to thermonuclear war, from which very few people will have a chance of surviving. So the job is to get rid of Obama, in the proper way, by indicting him for the crimes he’s committed, to remove him from office on that basis. That is the only solution we have, for the existence of the United States and for much of the world besides."

Over the last 48 hours, the roster of crimes committed by Barack Obama has continued to pile up, exemplified by the Cheney-esque threats issued by his Defense Secretary Ash Carter, that the U.S. is preparing for war with both Russia and China. Speaking at the conclusion of a week-long tour of Asia which was bristling with provocations, Carter pronounced: "Moscow's nuclear saber-rattling raises questions about Russian leaders' commitment to strategic stability ... Make no mistake, the United States will defend our interests."

At the same time, the British Empire has telegraphed its identical intentions, with a censure against Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn by Britain's top general, Chief of the Defense Staff Gen. Sir Nicholas Houghton, who attacked Corbyn for being "opposed to the use of nuclear weapons."

Given the threat which Barack Obama and the British Empire represent to the continued existence of humanity, LaRouche said, "We must assemble the people in Manhattan, and also in other parts of the United States, into a single unity of purpose. Unless we can do that, and get rid of Obama, for example, and other afflictions which have been imposed on the United States, we don’t have a chance of saving this nation."

"This nation is one nation," LaRouche affirmed. "It is not a division of, separation of states within one nation. It is one nation," as typified by Alexander Hamilton and his policies.

And that one nation has a unique role to play in the concert of nations, orchestrating into existence a global Hamiltonian system of development, along the lines of Lyndon and Helga LaRouche's long-standing program for developing a World Land-Bridge—which emphatically extends into the otherwise doomed United States. As a forthcoming EIR publication on the U.S. role in the World Land-Bridge puts it: "The U.S. Can Stop Killing and Dying, and Start Building Again"—beginning with the Constitutional removal of Barack Obama from the White House.
