

The Time of Reckoning Has Arrived: Trump Has Been Exonerated — Now Exonerate LaRouche!

There is an earthquake of sorts sweeping the United States, as the reality of the entire "Russiagate" operation against President Trump sinks in: There is nothing there, there never was anything there, and this was as much an operation against the American people as it was against President Donald Trump himself.

Angry commentators are asking: "Is this where it's going to end? Are those responsible going to have to pay for their crimes?" Others are saying that this is now "a time of reckoning," against the media, against the Obama Democrats, and, with much greater precision, against the British intelligence apparatus that started the whole operation in the first place. This is a point which Trump himself emphasized last week in his tweets: that the British launched the operation to prevent him from establishing peaceful cooperation with Russia and China.

But there is an even deeper significance to the changes being unleashed in the U.S. and globally by the meltdown of the Mueller "Russiagate" scam. In remarks today, Helga Zepp-LaRouche addressed that issue:

Now we can really put the entire world in order, in the way that Lyndon LaRouche dedicated his life to achieving, Zepp-LaRouche stated. Special Counsel Robert Mueller's Russiagate operation turned out to be a big "nothing-burger," and there will be more earthquakes to come in the weeks ahead, especially if you look at the big advances of the Belt and Road Initiative as a result of Xi Jinping's trip to Italy and Europe. Now is the time of reckoning, as many in the media have recognized, but to ensure that happens, we must place the fight to exonerate Lyndon LaRouche on center stage.

That is because the same apparatus behind Russiagate was responsible for jailing Lyndon LaRouche, Helga Zepp-LaRouche stated. "That apparatus, which went after Lyn and the other associates of ours, did incredible damage to the U.S. and the world, by vilifying Lyn and the organization in such a way that people were completely blinded to the kind of options which Lyn's ideas mean for the world and the future of humanity.

"I think that, despite the wonderful things that China is doing," Zepp-LaRouche continued, "that Lyn has brought in a depth to the discussion, in terms of scientific and cultural ideas, which is really lacking. It's as if you were to take Beethoven out of music—it wouldn't be the same thing. And if you would take Schiller out of poetry, it wouldn't be the same thing. So I think, from the standpoint of bringing the world into order, this was always something I thought was very unique to Lyn: that when you talked to him, everything would sort of fall into place. Lyn would bring the world into order. And I think that is exactly the mission we have to have."

Zepp-LaRouche also emphasized the remarks posted yesterday by retired senior U.S. Military Intelligence officer and security analyst Col. (ret.) Pat Lang, who wrote that, as a result of Russiagate, "a great opportunity has been lost for improving relations with the Russian thermonuclear power." Lang added that "only hyper-nationalist madmen like Brennan and Clapper and ignorant Jingos like Bolton and Pompeo can imagine that an improvement in relations with a country which can destroy you was not a good idea."

To which Zepp-LaRouche added: "It's my view that we have to have the approach to free Trump from these elements, and point to the fact that they are doing the opposite of what Trump's stated intentions are," including having good working relations with Russia's President Vladimir Putin and China's President Xi Jinping.

"The only way to get out of this mess is to cooperate in a new paradigm: close the trade gap by having joint ventures, have American firms cooperate with Chinese firms in the construction of Africa, for example. People have to think differently. If we don't overcome geopolitics, the world will blow up, and that danger still is clearly there.

"We have to elevate the American population to say that Trump is an incredible President. He has stood up to one of the biggest conspiracies, and now the Democrats and others have egg on their face: They are conspiracy theorists who failed, they are completely discredited. And now we have to support the Trump Presidency so that the Four Power agreement LaRouche proposed can be reached, but that requires a good relationship with Russia and China, because if you declare these countries enemies, competitors and rivals, you will never get a Four Power agreement.

"So I think that we should say that Trump is still President; his policies on this should be followed; and if there are members of his cabinet who contradict him, then he should get better people in their place."

Zepp-LaRouche concluded with the following perspective:

"We have to have a completely optimistic view. History is not endless; history is not a soap opera, where you have one episode after another, but you have certain inflection points where you have to change, use a new gear, go to a new plateau—or you will go under in the old mess. And the only way to get out of this mess is to go fully with Lyn's ideas, and that means people have to be freed from all the garbage thrown against him. That now has to be cleaned up. Just think about the shock effect it would have around the world if Lyn were to be exonerated: everything would fall into place. There are certain flanks, even in a seemingly impossible situation, that you can use to remedy the problem on a higher level."
